"Carry Me Back to Old Virginia"

Miles of Honeysuckle

Let us mention one feature of Virginia highways which made many of them particularly attractive when we visited that region last May. All along the fences in the rural sections there were actually miles and miles of wild honeysuckles. Now and then we stopped to pick a sprig; pink lily like blossoms with fragrance that filled the car. They were not cultivated; probably nobody bothered to plant them. They simply grew wild, running along the fences in case they had a fence to cling to, growing all by themselves where there were no fences.

Now the dogwood is the official flower of Virginia and the Governor himself had said that dogwood blossoms would be in their prime in May. Perhaps they were. More likely we spent so much time in admiring the honeysuckle vines that we missed most of the nice looking dogwood blossoms.

Named for Mad Anthony

Leaving Monticello around noon we soon came to Waynesboro, a busy village with mountains all around it. When the first settlement was made there somebody gave it the name of Teeville. Then, some 60 years later the residents revolted and renamed their town in honor of Mad Anthony Wayne, who had by that time established himself as an Indian fighter and Revolutionary War hero.

Near Waynesboro is where we started travelling over that famous roller coaster highway, Skyline Drive, and the next 105 miles were filled with scenic thrills.

Like Link Sausages

Perhaps one way to describe the Blue Ridge Mountains in this region is to imagine a string of link sausages more than 100 miles long and stretched out on a table in a fairly straight line, roughly speaking north and south. Waynesboro is on the southern end and on the table. Front Royal, also on the table, is at the northern end. Now imagine a line drawn up from the table, running along one side of the sausage until it comes to the gap in between the links, then crossing to the other side, and so on until you reach the end of the string. This gives you a crude idea of how Skyline Drive has been laid out. You are on one side of a mountain and then you are on the other side of the next one. But all the time, even when you come to the 'gaps,' you are more than 2300 feet high.

In some respects this may be the loneliest road you ever travelled on for in all this distance there isn't a single village and gasoline stations are few and far between. But there are scores of delightful stopping places along the scenic route, and most likely you'll want to stop at every one of them for each has its own particular view.

Way down there are farm houses and rich lands of the Shenandoah River Valley and shops or even villages, and you may even get a glimpse of the river as it makes seven distinct bends, that is if the valley is not too misty—and it all too frequently is. And in the background you will see another range of mountains, miles and miles away.

Then at the next overlook you may be looking eastward where more mountains are piled up and now and then you can see a farm house high on a windy hill and far from the nearest settlement.

There are facilities for picnicking in some of these overlooks and most of them are provided with running water. Now and then you

TRUE TALES OF NEW ENGLAND

By CHARLES H. CUMMINGS
THE LAST SMITH DRIVE

When the internal combustion engine began to propel vehicles on our highways and gasoline came into general use as fuel instead of hay and grain, some industries laid off their help. Garages sprung up on the main streets instead of blacksmith shops and the profession of dashboard making no longer brought good salaries to the few experts who had become skilled in that trade.

With this brief introduction we will travel directly to the little Connecticut Valley village which was the home of the Smith family. John Smith, head of the little tribe, was an expert dashboard maker. And when the great Johnson carriage factory folded, there was no work for poor John Smith.

Now there are some who would take other jobs when their first jobs were washed up. Unfortunately, however, John did not possess this trait of adaptability. True he did earn a few dollars now and then, taking small and easy jobs, and his little garden plot produced some small potatoes and a few cab-ages, but at no time was John's income sufficient to provide food and clothing for his family or satisfy the landlord's demands for monthly rent.

Mrs. Smith was very popular with the ladies in that Nutmeg State village. She and her husband were always ready when the church was running a supper or the men's club was putting on a minstrel show. But, with the Smith family growing poorer each year, usually it became necessary for the good townspeople to dig down rather deeply into their pockets to carry the Ludwig Hoel who recently announced himself as 'labor's candidate for mayor of Concord, later changed his mind and withdrew his name. We wonder why.

Possibly Ludwig thought he was too old to run. He's about 78, you may remember and certainly does not rate as a spring chicken.

Or it may be that some of the local labor leaders had the same idea and persuaded him to withdraw. We don't think he had a ghost of a chance of winning, but of course we've been wrong quite a few times in the past.

Actually organized labor's endorsement of a candidate or party doesn't go very far and political action committees very seldom affect the individual unionists' idea that it's his personal ballot, he is entirely capable of making his own decisions and marking his ballot any way he chooses. You can't stampede a group of union men as though they were a bunch of cows. They're independent, capable of thinking such things out for themselves and most of them refuse to be told how to vote.

A few of the city employees were probably against City Manager Brackett. You will usually find some who are opposed to the 'boss' no matter how good he is or how well he treats them.

Building Idle for Months Purchased by Kaplan, Boston Textile Man

Penacook people may soon have reasons to sing again! The Pipe Factory has finally been sold.

Up until a year or so ago the splendid brick factory building on upper Washington street was occupied by the Pipe Company and giving steady employment to probably 200 workers, male and female. Then, because of a strike elsewhere in another shop the company operated, the company closed its Penacook plant, pulled up stakes and moved away, leaving the building vacant except for the watchmen who patrolled it regularly each night.

Since it closed efforts were started to find a new owner for the building and a new industry for Penacook. The Concord Regional Development Corporation, efficiently managed by George R. Chennell, began investigating the possibilities. First efforts failed. It is not believed the owners were too anxious in the earlier days to dispose vacant mill building. It may be that they saw some chance of coming back to Penacook, even though they had moved all of their machinery. This might have been a wise move for here they had already trained hundreds of workers in the manufacture of smoking pipes, and here, too, they had no labor problems.

There is no income from an idle mill. Insurance and taxes go right along. Watchmen must be kept on duty day by day and night by night. And in time depreciation sets in piling up more expense.

Several prospective purchasers came to look over the Pipe Shop. In fact most of the new industries which have come to this area within the past year or so looked over the building. None of them found it entirely adapted to their particular line of work, however. It's a solid and substantial building, to be sure, and capable of housing an industry that could employ two or three hundred people or even a lot more. But industrialists today go for single story buildings so there'll be no need of elevators or stairways.

The Holden Woolen Mill, as it was originally called, was built in 1890 according to the then standard specifications. It is 140 feet long, 60 feet wide and four stories high.

Although the purchase price of the building has not been made public it is known this it was bought for a very reasonable figure and already it is reported plans are being made for extensive renovations.

We hope nothing in this story leads anyone to believe that the purchase of the pipe shop by Theodore Kaplan of the Eastern Textile Corporation of Boston means that the whistle will blow in a few more days and smoke will start billowing from the high smokestack. Actually there will be 60 days before the Boston man takes possession. Then it is also true that he bought it as a speculation. But Mr. Kaplan is known to have connections among various industrialists and has also made terms for sub-leases attractive. This is, at least, the first step toward bringing new industry to Penacook.

SPEAKING OF SPUTNIK

We don't know much about Geophysics, if that's what they call it, except that we're smart enough to realize that it isn't a substitute for pastor oil that the drug companies have lately put out. When we were of school age teachers didn't dabble with such high and mighty subjects. They were more concerned with such trivial things at the four R's—reading, 'riting, rithmetic and rod-wielding.

Being thus blessed with a highly unscientific mind we freely admit that we can't quite get all hot and bothered just because the soviets have launched a man-made moon up high in the sky, or even that they set it going before we Americans did. We've already heard it beeping and burping up there. We've even seen it on our television. And still we aren't over-enthused. The thing we are wondering just now is what good will it to do, to the people on Planet Earth in general, and more specifically to the people of Penacook, County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire. When this question is settled then we may raise a flag with the hammer and sickle, admit that the soviets are wonderfully clever, and give three lusty cheers for old Speednack, Spitnix or whatever they've called it.

Just now we understand the soviets are claiming that they will be first to take a trip to the moon, and we wish them great joy in this venture. In fact we can think of a number of them most people have for years been wishing were up there already and if they do get that far away it will be a great blessing to mankind.

But why go to the moon or outer space for conquests when there's so much to be done to make this old planet happier, safer and better. Imagine how the whole world would rejoice and burst out into a joyous song if only we had security, brotherhood and peace instead of this never ending yapping and snapping between nations.

The Twentieth Century has brought with it many great developments in most things. We speed through the air in jet planes faster than the speed of sound; or over the roads on highways smooth as glass. We twist a knob and bring Queen Elizabeth right on our television screen; we get a 'shot' and are protected from diseases which were killers in grandfather's time; we live in centrally-heated, air-conditioned luxury; we can have strawberry shortcake any day in the year by opening the frzeer or going to the nearest supermarket.

And yet the thing we want the most—security against war—is the thing that seems hardest to get, and the only way we've found in this dilemma is to spend more money than our potential enemies, build more and deadlier machines of mass murder, raise, equip and maintain powerful fighting forces, and, possibly, bankrupt ourselves in this foolish and wasteful process.

We don't know the answer to this problem. Just now nobody seems to know its answer. But we do know this: Someday we will have to find the answer—or perish.

And when that answer is finally found—for it must and eventually will be—the world would be happier than if Sputnik's soaring brought to light the amazing discovery that the moon could be reached almost as easily as one can now fly to Boston, and Pale Luna turned out to be a pleasant place for mankind to live in, all filled with coy and loving lassies, green grasslands, orchids growing everywhere, tall palm trees, apple pies a la mode and banana splits.

ABUNDANT LIFE

BY ORAL ROBERTS

LEE QUIT WHIMPERING—PAID THE MORTGAGE

There are many, many people in this world who get a peculiar kind of pleasure out of feeling sorry for themselves. They cringe before life's problems. They whimper and whine and say, "Nobody has it as hard as I do!" I heard the story about the two buckets that went to the well. One of the buckets sobbed and cried, "No matter how full I go away from the well, I always have to come back empty." The other one laughed and said, "No matter how empty I come to the well, I always go away full."

Lee Braxton, the national radio director of our world-wide broadcast, told me that self-pity almost ruined him. Back when the depression was at its worst he was in hard circumstances. The mortgage people were coming to foreclose on his modest little home. At the same time his small business was about to go under. He walked off and sat down in a room by himself and said, "Why is everybody picking on me?"

Recently he told me what he did that day as he sat in the little room. He said, "I was sitting there with the whole world on my shoulders. I felt so discouraged, so down and out that I knew if I didn't get hold of myself I might do something terrible. I kept wringing my hands and saying, 'Oh, why does everybody have to pick on me? Why does this have to happen to me?' I didn't know where else to turn or who else to see.

"Then it dawned on me that there was One I could go to. So I got down on my knees and while the tears splashed down my cheeks I renewed my covenant with my Maker. When I got through praying I felt like a new man. I got up, squared my shoulders and said, 'I am through with self-pity and feeling sorry for myself. I am going out and by the help of God I am coming out of this.'

What happened to Lee Braxton after that should happen to everyone. He started using his energies to believe instead of to feel sorry for himself. He became a new man inside and in a matter of days he had persuaded the mortgage people to give him a little more time. He secured credit for his business. He didn't lose his self-respect because when he began to believe, he found that his faith was the most powerful thing in the world. Other people saw he was a new man and they wanted to do business with a man like that.

It is people who resist self-pity, who do not feel sorry for themselves, who will not allow themselves to cringe and whimper before life's struggles, who stand up and say, "I believe God is with me. And if He is with me nothing or nobody can successfully be against me. I will succeed!"

When a storm strikes an eagle he sets his wings in such a way that the winds lift him above the storm by its very fury. This is God's way for us. With the right use of our faith, we will not fear the storms that come our way. It is the set of our faith that causes us to rise above the storms. Have faith in God!

DALE CARNEGIE

AUTHOR OF "HOW TO STOP WORRYING AND START LIVING"

N. T. PAYNE, Darlington, Alabama, for the past three years has had a bad heart condition. Last fall his wife was operated on for the removal of a lung cancer; this was her second operation for cancer in two and one-half years.

He was so worried that he became extremely nervous and lost weight. He couldn't sleep; he could not concentrate on his work. Toward the first of December he read a book on Worry, and in this book he found what he so badly needed. He began living in a day-tight compartment; began counting his blessings.

Each morning as soon as he awakened he thanked God for giving him and his wife another day. Among his blessings were his home, his family and his friends. He thought of each of his friends and of the many fine qualities that each possessed. Soon he found that whereas once he was in the habit of finding fault with them, he now found only fine qualities.

Soon he experienced a glow of happiness that stayed with him all day long. His wife soon joined in this program and has been uplifted by it. Recently she was examined by her doctor who was amazed at the fine condition she was in, and Mr. Payne believes that she has a splendid chance for a complete recovery. His own physical condition has also greatly improved, and their home is now a happy place.

All due to one simple discovery.

Smith through the winter.' In fact, each October various tradesmen and church leaders brought them food, fuel and cash donations; clothing was given them so that John, Lena and their four children could go to church each Sunday without looking too shabby. These donations were as regular as tax bills, and were certain to go on until the Smith children were old enough to get married or go to work.

One thing the villagers remembered, John's brother, who lived in Iowa, was fairly prosperous. In fact the brother was sending a small check quite regularly to help the unlucky family get by. And he had told John that if he lived in Iowa he would give him a job in his store at fair wages.

October arrived. Time had come for the community to 'shell out for the Smiths.' The Ladies Aid and the men's club started their annual subscription drive. Then Mr. Jones the banker, thought of a brilliant idea. This year, he suggested, the townspeople of Nutmeg Hollow should be more liberal than ever with their donations. Why not raise money enough to send the Smiths to Iowa?

The response was gratifying. Kelly's garage donated a second hand car large enough to provide room for the whole family, with space for lots of things in the big trunk. Sweeney's garage supplied four new retreats. The entire family was decked out in new clothes, shoes and rubbers. Nothing was overlooked to make their trip convenient and certain. Even road maps with the shortest and best route between Nutmeg Hollow and Iowa were secured from the travel bureau in Boston, with the itinerary orange so there could be no mistakes.

The committee arranged a mammoth party at the town hall the night before the Smiths were expected to depart on their long trip. Everybody in town paid half a dollar to attend and partake of the bountiful supper prepared by the Ladies Aid. Their new car, all polished and shining, was parked at the entrance. Speeches were delivered by prominent citizens, the most flowery and longest being given by Honorable Franklin P. Titus, chairman of the Board of Selectmen. John and his family were called to the stage and presented with various gifts. In reporting the affair Miss Matilda Montague, veteran reporter of the Nutmeg Hollow News-Limelight termed it the most important social event in the village since James G. Blaine visited the community when she was a little girl of sweet sixteen.

There was a short musical interlude, provided by the children of the grammar school orchestra, and then the Chairman of the Selectmen cleared his throat, lifted his long arms in a command for silence, drew a sheet of foolscap from the inside pocket of his long black coat and began speaking once more. He referred to the Smith's long residence in Nutmeg Hollow; he told how townspeople would mourn their departure; he wished them success and prosperity in their new home in the west; he expressed the opinion that John Smith was one of the town's most valued citizens.

Then, as a grand finale, the Honorable Franklin P. Titus handed John a gaily decorated purse while Miss Matilda Montague nearly lost her balance, standing high upon one of the town hall's shakiest stools to get a flashlight photograph of the presentation. Actually the News-

Limelight did not print the picture even though they did send the film to Springfield to have the engraving made. Unfortunately Miss Matilda pressed the button of her big camera at the same moment her body was most likely to fall to the floor and all that showed in the engraving was a couple of bald heads in the front row, a girl with a horsetail hair-do, and the pant legs and shoes of the Honorable Franklin P. Titus and the Honorable Guest, Mr. John Culver Smith. But if poor Miss Matilda's aim had been more accurate it would have shown John Smith accepting a gaily beribboned purse containing the sum of $315.70 which had been contributed to defray all expenses of the proposed Iowa trip.

Next morning, bright and early, the townspeople gathered at the village square to bid the Smith's Godspeed. The Boy Scouts, Campfire Girls and even the American Legion band were all there. Parson Goodwin gave a long prayer, telling the Good Lord how the Smiths would be missed and asking Him to guide them over the highway. Then, as the band played 'God Be with You Till We Meet Again' John Smith and his family made their departure.

In little groups the crowd left the village green. At long last, they concluded, the Smiths had made their departure. No longer would the generous people of the village have to dig down into their pockets to see the family through the long winter months. The last 'Smith Drive' had been an expensive one, but it was well worth its extra cost. Theron Jones, Esq. president of the Nutmeg Hollow Bank and the Honorable Franklin P. Titus walked arm in arm down Main street to the canal, now and then to receive congratulations from the people along the short journey.

Life in Nutmeg Hollow resumed its normal trend. Business was resumed, band members doffed their brilliant uniforms and went back to their various jobs. Miss Matilda hobbled to the office of the News-Limelight and wrote a first page story of the event; kids went back to school at noon, having been dismissed for the forenoon session.

Parson Goodwin returned to the manse, later to prepare for his Sunday sermon; and Mrs. Abbie Ada Johnson, president of the Ladies Aid began making plans for the next monthly meeting of that organization.

Thursday afternoon finally arrived and most of the society's members were on hand promptly. It was an important gathering, for not only did Mrs. Johnson make special preparations, including ice cream and whipped cream cake, but some member must be elected to fill the position of secretary and member of the hospitality committee formerly held by Mrs. Lena Smith.

Quite naturally the departure of the Smiths was the topic receiving most consideration. John, they decided, could do a lot more to support the family than he had been in the habit of doing since the carriage shop shut down years before. Lena Smith could have made her spouse find some sort of regular work if she had really determined to; or she could have taken a job in the mill. The children could have been a lot more careful with the clothes that had been donated.

Mrs. Abbie Ada Johnson brought out a large road map and the ladies gathered around the table to study it. They decided that, with good luck, the Smiths must be traveling somewhere in Eastern Ohio. It would take five or six days for them to reach Iowa.

Just then a somewhat muddy car stopped at the Johnson driveway and a travel stained lady got out, rushed up the steps and rang the bell. Mrs. Johnson opened the big door, gasped a moment in surprise as the woman continued into the dining room.

"Hi, girls!" Lena Smith called out throwing her coat and hat on the sofa and taking a vacant seat at the table. "We're back home again. John and I talked it over, and after that grand party you gave us and all the good things you said about us, we decided there is no place like Nutmeg Hollow." "We got as far as Niagara Falls," Lena continued; "and then we turned back. John's gone to the telegraph office to wire his brother to send some money so we can rent our old place again. Then if we can pick some odds and ends of furniture we'll get settled down again. Little Joey is going to try to get a paper route so he can scrape up money enough to buy some gasoline and with a car all our own and so many good friends here in Nutmeg Hollow this is going to be our home as long as we live."

can find a spot where more elaborate facilities are provided, such as cabins or rooms, and there will naturally be gift shops in these places where you can buy almost anything that attracts your eyes.

Before coming to Panorama, which is about 75 miles from the starting point at Waynesboro, the highway passes through a short tunnel under Mary's Rock, then plunges downward to the intersection of Route 211 at Panorama.

We Wait for Supper

Three hungry members of the Cummings Clan stopped here for supper but found the dining room closed for the night and no food in sight for the next 31 miles. It was not our first visit to Panorama, however, as we had toured that part of Skyline between Front Royal and Panorama on our previous trip to Virginia, so the road seemed familiar. It was growing dark by now and we hustled on to Front Royal, got rooms in the same little motel that had taken us in two years before, sampled the food at the nearest restaurant, and next morning found us heading back over the Skyline Drive again, this time going only as far as Panorama.

You see most of the way from Panorama to Front Royal on the night before we had been touring in darkness; in fact it was so late that the toll gate near Front Royal was closed and nobody picked up our tickets. Strange to say that morning we were too early, and so we rode on through the open gate once more without surrendering our pass.

Luray Caverns

Two years ago when we were in this region we turned at Panorama and visited the spectacular caverns at Luray where for a mile or so we rambled through a subterranean world too beautiful and filled with a wide variety of colorful oddities actually too interesting and strange to be described by this writer. We have visited other caverns, and in fact there are many others in this region which one should see. But Luray seems to have been painted by the Creator particularly for our enjoyment and delight.

This time, instead of turning to the west at Panorama, as we did before, we turned eastward, went down a rather steep incline over Route 211 and finally came back to Front Royal over Route 522 after about 40 miles of varied but ever delightful scenery. On our left much of the way we could see little cars speeding over the Skyline Drive, and almost always where was the great range of mountains over which we had been traveling.

We were now heading back toward Penacook and the next important town we visited was Winchester, oldest city in Virginia west of the Blue Ridge and where George Washington began his work at Surveyor. More than 100 military engagements took place in this vicinity during the Civil War and it is said the city changed hands 72 times.

Beyond Frederick, Route 340 took us to Berryville and five miles farther on, near Gaylord we crossed the state line and were now in West Virginia, soon to come to Charles Town where John Brown was tried, sentenced and hanged; and also where there are seven homes of members of the Washington family, two of which are open for free inspection visits. It is a short drive from Charles Town to Harper's Ferry and here is truly an historic shrine well worth a full day's visit although we were unable to spend more than two short hours there and our recital of that tour must wait until the next edition of The Advertiser.

and we'll get the wedding invitations at The Advertiser office where they have the finest line in town.

Penacook

During most of this week so far there has been standing room only at Wynne Fowler's Penacook drug store as the twice a year Rexall One Cent sale goes merrily on. Just now Penacook has the only Rexall store in this locality, the nearest one, we understand, being located in Pittsfield, so many people are coming up from Concord to buy a wide variety of things at regular prices with two of them for only a penny more.

The tractor which had been pulling a large trailer loaded with hay in bales came to grief last week near the cider mill and as it could now be quickly repaired the hay was left there parked for several days while the driver contacted a few nearby farmers and finally managed to sell it.

The anniversary of the discovery of Christopher Columbus in 1492 this year fell on Saturday and was observed by some of the stores operating on short time, the bank being closed, some factory workers working, and others otherwise enjoying themselves.

The weather these past few days has been ideal; rather chilly when the sun goes down but warm and bright at other times with frequent fogs which also serve to bring a bit of needed moisture. Since the last week of September the foliage has been spectacular, not only in the mountains but also right here in Penacook. From now on the leaves are likely to fall more rapidly, and then, next thing you know you'll be quite likely to look out of your window and see the ground covered with snow.

Vincent Vigue's truck backed up to the front door of the premises formerly occupied by John Child's grocery and market use day this week, and now that business is entirely closed. We don't know how long there has been a grocery store and market in this location, but we do recall when we came to Penacook about 35 years ago, Mrs. Saidel was operating there and doing a lively business. There have been several other owners since that time, but always someone has been selling groceries and meat there.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Welch of Kezar Fall, Maine, former Penacook residents, are vacationing in Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Gerrish of New York City were guests at The Advertiser office last week and escorted by the editor on a little tour of Penacook, Boscawen and Salisbury. Mr. Gerrish has been in his retirement in another year or so.

Collectors' Exhibition Will Interest Many

There's an exhibition coming up next weekend which, we think, will be of interest to our readers. Going under the formidable title of Tristate Collectors' Exhibition, is, nonetheless, an interesting display of antique and commemorative china, the famous Vatican stamp collection belonging to Cardinal Spellman of New York; button collections, rare and antique coins, a famous Polish (pre-Communist) stamp exhibit, and a showing of quilt making on the spot.

Awards will be made in each of four divisions: stamps, coins, under 16 collectors, and miscellaneous.

The exhibition will be at the Concord Armory, Saturday, Oct. 26 from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. and on Sunday, Oct. 27 from 1 to 7 p.m.

Canterbury Church News

Teach Children Fire Safety Early!

Children should be taught at an early age to respect fire not fear it. They should be made aware of its uses and benefits, and also its dangers. They should be urged to cooperate in the family job of fire prevention. Remember, children, like adults must be taught fire safety. Their lives depend on you!
